

Your First Visit

Generally, your first visit is longer than your follow up visits or at the very least it entails quite a bit of questioning. Some practitioners will not treat at all on the first visit. In my practice, after initial questioning, I always begin with a gentle balancing treatment to address your specific concerns.

The initial questioning is a very important part of the care that I can provide to you. While many of the questions may seem entirely irrelevant to your condition, for example asking the quality of your bowel movements when you came in for back pain or your psychological state when you came in for menstrual problems, there are very good reasons behind the questions. The answers you provide to the questions, along with other basic diagnostic tools such as looking at your tongue and feeling your pulse allow me to tailor the treatment specifically to you.

In general people find acupuncture to be an incredibly relaxing experience, even for those who have some initial hesitation about needles. The needling during the first treatment may be limited so you can become accustomed to the experience and the practitioner can see how you respond.

This individualization of the treatments is one of the strong points of oriental medicine. It is why people may experience broad changes within themselves after receiving acupuncture for a specific complaint. It also means that the treatments can be modified over time if they are not proving effective.
